

WEEK 9 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

CEDRIC TILLMAN (WR) - CLE (10)

With over 21 targets in two games and surpassing 80 receiving yards in both, there is enough evidence for me to believe he may end up being the first or second receiving option on this revitalized offense that traded away their best receiver and is starting their backup quarterback. I am concerned that this may be his ceiling since Jerry Jeudy, Elijah Moore, and David Njoku have also been fantasy-relevant, and the competition for targets might make Tillman a solid flex instead of a low-end WR2.

2

KEON COLEMAN (WR) - BUF (12)

This is probably the last time I can mention him here. Still, he's been putting together a couple of solid performances, with the arrival of Amari Cooper helping the overall passing offense. Josh Allen has had his first two games with over 280 passing yards this season. Coleman has struggled earlier this season, so I wouldn't be starting him right away, but against a good matchup, he's become a decent streaming option in all leagues.

3

MATTHEW STAFFORD (QB) - LAR (6)

This is a bit different than what I normally talk about, but considering he's rostered in 40% of leagues and is a potential streaming option in single QB leagues, he's now underrated. The return of Puka Nacua and Cooper Kupp raises the ceiling for this offense, and we saw it last week when Stafford had his first multi-touchdown performance against a top-ten defense in the league. He's easily a top pick-up in all superflex leagues but is streamable against SEA this week and MIA next week.

4

ADAM THELIEN/XAVIER LEGETTE (WR) - CAR (11)

This is only if the team trades Diontae Johnson within the next couple of weeks, which will open up opportunities for the secondary receiving options to become potential streaming options in PPR leagues as a bye-week fill-in. Averaging nine targets a game over his last five, that's enough volume for at least one of those receivers to become a weekly contributor, albeit one with low upside due to the struggling offense, making them a last-resort waiver pick-up.

FOLLOW US @AKAMAIFANTASY

WWW.AKAMAIFANTASYFOOTBALL.COM