

WEEK 5 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 45% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

TREY LANCE - QB (SF) - WK 6 BYE

Usually, I don't recommend QBs, but it's hard to ignore when they have the rushing upside. Seeing significant playing time last week because of Garoppolo's injury, he showed some promise, albeit with flaws as well. I don't expect to start him unless Garoppolo is hurt, but this is the moment you can add him before everyone realizes the potential (if they already haven't).

DAMIEN WILLIAMS - RB (CHI) - WK 10 BYE

Latavius Murray is almost qualified, but instead, we have someone who can provide a spot start due to injury. Montgomery hurt his knee late in last week's win, and while it's likely he will return this season, questions are surrounding next week. If he misses time, then Williams can be expected to start. I'm not sure how severe the injury is, but every week matters, and Williams can provide short-term value.

DARNELL MOONEY - WR (CHI) - WK 10 BYE

He remains a crucial piece of the offense, with seven targets or more in three out of four games this season regardless of who starts at QB. While Fields hasn't been impressive for fantasy managers, he could target Mooney consistently throughout last week's game for big plays. If Dalton eventually returns, I'm still confident that this guy will remain as one of the primary receiving threats on the roster.

JOSH GORDON - WR (KC) - WK 12 BYE

I wanted to mention WR Hunter Renfrow again as he remains a solid PPR flex option, scoring touchdowns in consecutive games. However, if you're looking for more upside, then Gordon is an option. There's over 45% of targets between everyone not named Kelce and Hill, and he could earn a part of that. He may end up not worth a roster spot, but he's worth a speculative add.
