

WEEK 9 DEF STREAMERS

LOOKING FOR TEAMS ON LESS THAN 60% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

KANSAS CITY CHIEFS VS TEN

This is more about the offense and the great matchup than the defense since we saw how run-heavy the TEN offense is without Ryan Tannehill. This defense is top ten in rushing yards per attempt, rushing yards per game, and rushing touchdowns. Even if Tannehill returns, I don't expect that to change the outcome drastically. They are a top-12 streaming option that I will be targeting first over the other options.

SEATTLE SEAHAWKS @ AZ

Over the last three games, this defense has been impressive, not allowing more than 21 points, averaging more than four sacks, and forcing multiple turnovers. One of those games was against AZ, and despite the addition of Deandre Hopkins, I'm still confident that this defense will continue to generate pressure and force mistakes. They aren't a top-12 streaming option but are a solid candidate for seven to nine points.

GREEN BAY PACKERS @ DET

While they haven't been impressive, they have been solid despite the struggles on offense. They are consistently generating pressure and have forced a turnover in consecutive games. Facing against a DET offense that can run the ball, I'm not rushing to start this defense, but I feel optimistic that they will finish as a top-15 defense with six to eight points.

CINCINNATI BENGALS VS. CAR

This defense hasn't been impressive, but they have a solid matchup against an overachieving offense. Generating multiple sacks in back-to-back games, they have held opponents to under 20 points in four of the last six games and are one of the underrated streaming options. There's top-12 potential, but it is more likely a low-ceiling option to get you a handful of points.
