

WEEK 4 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

DARNELL MOONEY (WR) - ATL (12)

With 15 targets over the past two games, Mooney may have a regular role within the offense as a deep threat that will be involved when defenses focus on London and Robinson. If he continues to be involved, he has shown the upside of a WR3 or flex option in all league formats. It's still early, so I would only start him if it is a last-resort option. However, I'm looking to add him as a priority to my teams that need WR depth or are dealing with multiple injuries.

BRAELON ALLEN (RB) - NYJ (12)

With Bucky Irving getting a lot of the attention, I think it's important to remember that Allen was also productive, with at least 50 all-purpose yards in back-to-back games and near double-digit touches. Sure, he will never steal the lead role from Hall, but Rodgers's willingness to check down to the RB position helps Allen have a floor (albeit a low one). He's also looked good as a complementary runner, averaging over four yards a carry. He's a strong handcuff with potential stand-alone value.

WAN'DALE ROBINSON (WR) - NYG (11)

The emergence of Malik Nabers has resurrected this offense, and Robinson, as the secondary receiving threat, has been one of its benefactors. With 24 targets this season, the team wants to involve him, resulting in a solid flex option in PPR-scoring leagues with WR3 potential. He is a top target in full PPR leagues, with at least six catches in two games. However, because of his role, he's not as valuable in standard scoring leagues and becomes touchdown or bust despite the volume.

EMANUEL WILSON (RB) - GB (10)

It's a deeper option, and perhaps you should wait on him and pick up Rico Dowdle or Cam Akers, but with Marshawn Lloyd on IR, there's an excellent opportunity for Wilson to solidify himself as the handcuff to Josh Jacobs. He looked good in garbage time last week, and I can imagine him having a handful of carries each game. I am highly optimistic about him because I am optimistic about this GB offense, and I believe Wilson may end up as a flex option if he can grow his role in the offense.
