

WAIVER ADDS WEEK 10

11/10/2020

These five players should be targeted in most 12 team leagues and are currently rostered in less than 40% of Yahoo leagues.

DUKE JOHNSON - HOU (8)

Injuries suck. With David Johnson going through the concussion protocol, it's important to monitor the practice reports as he could play next week. If he's out, that would open up the lead role for Duke which he performed well last week with 20 touches, 73 total yards and a TD last week. Facing CLE next week, I would be looking to place a speculative bid to see if we can get a top 20 RB option if David sits.

JAKOBI MEYERS - NE (5)

Coming off of 30 targets over the past three weeks, it's clear that he has become the top receiving option for the team with the injuries to Edelman & Harry. I can assure you he may not receive double digit targets every game, but it's hard to see that rapport with Cam and not believe there's six to eight targets a game that is WR3 value in PPR formats.

JALEN REAGOR - PHI (9)

Coming off of the bye, I would be scooping him up if he's available. Sure, Fulgham is the first option on the team, but we have seen flashes throughout the year that he has a role on the offense and the team needs playmakers on offense. With matchups against NYG, CLE, & SEA in the next three weeks, he's likely end up being a decent flex option for you navigating through bye weeks.

J.D. MCKISSIC - WAS (8)

Making another appearance on this list, if you are in any PPR formats he has quietly been a RB2/3 for you the past four games averaging over 12 points per game in full PPR formats. He faces DET, CIN, & DAL in the next three weeks so continue to start him if you have him but definitely pick him up despite my selfish longing for Antonio Gibson to ciphen some targets away from Mckissic.

MICHAEL PITTMAN JR. - IND (7)

I would recommend Allen Lazard first if he's still available, but decided to think outside of the box here. This one is a little tough since Rivers likes to spread the ball around. But watching the game last week, I noticed he was the favorite target that game. Returning from injury, he performed well in the absence of Hilton and I would be curious if his role will continue to grow as he recovers.

