

WEEK 14 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

JAMES COOK (RB) - BUF

This isn't someone I would pick up with the expectations to start immediately. However, the upside is enticing if you make the playoffs. Last week he out-touched Devin Singletary, and while he may currently be in a 60/40 split, that could still be valuable since he's on an explosive BUF offense. He's had double-digit rushing attempts this season, and this was his consecutive game with at least five targets. A speculative add with some potential, especially in Week 16 against a bad CHI defense.

2

NICO COLLINS (WR) - HOU

Despite being mentioned in the past, it was better than Zay Jones, who I also mentioned last week. I wanted to remind you that Collins has averaged nine targets in the previous four games. I understand he's failed to surpass 50 receiving yards in any of those games and is on one of the worse offenses in the league. No question that limits his upside as the WR1; however, not having him as a quick plug-and-play in PPR leagues where you have at least 3 WR spots to start seems risky.

3

ZONOVAN KNIGHT (RB) - NYJ

I know he was the hot waiver add last week, but the fact that he still qualifies here means there are a couple of leagues that are a bit slow. With a tough matchup this week, he may not continue his strong performance, but I believe he will be a flex option in the fantasy playoffs with matchups against DET and JAX in Weeks 15 & 16. It gives me confidence that he's one of their feature rushers but still gets targets out of the backfield, even when Michael Carter returns.

4

JAMESON WILLIAMS (WR) - DET

This could've been Cam Akers, but I'm not falling for that trap. You can also try to take a shot on who will be the feature RB in SEA. However, I'm going with a swing for the fences here with Williams. He may not be healthy enough to make a meaningful contribution this year, but if you have an open bench spot, why not take a chance? This is a play for Weeks 15 and beyond. Hoping he can become the WR2 within that offense, even if it's only for a game or two.

FOLLOW US @AKAMAIFANTASY

WWW.AKAMAIFANTASYFOOTBALL.COM