

WEEK 11 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

AUDRIC ESTIME (RB) - DEN (14)

While he looked like the lead running back last week, he could have been more efficient on his double-digit rush attempts, averaging less than four yards per carry. However, what stood out was the lack of usage of Javonte Williams and Jaleel McLaughlin, who combined for three rush attempts and two targets. I wouldn't be spending all my FAAB to acquire Estime, but I would gladly take a chance and stash him on my bench as a potential flex option if he continues to be the lead guy.

2

RICKY PEARSALL (WR) - SF (9)

With his best game of the season last week, he's continuing to be a solid secondary receiving threat on this offense. Unfortunately, this was also the first time he surpassed 40 receiving yards. While he lacks the volume to be a top-24 option, I don't expect Jajuan Jennings to get double-digit targets regularly, and some of that will eventually go to Pearsall and give him enough volume to be a low-end flex option in PPR scoring leagues.

3

GUS EDWARDS (RB) - LAC (5)

While injured, JK Dobbins took advantage and solidified himself as an RB2 in that offense. Immediately, in his first week back, Gus Edwards led the team in rushing yards on double-digit attempts. While Dobbins led the team in rush attempts (15), the volume has changed, and both players are touchdown-dependent flex options. However, is that worth rostering a handcuff with a little stand-alone value? If you need a streaming option or a bye-week fill-in, Edwards is a low-upside option.

4

RASHOD BATEMAN (WR) - BAL (14)

One of my biggest mistakes this season was not realizing the boom-or-bust WR3 was worth rostering as a last-resort flex option. Bateman has been a solid secondary receiving threat with the upside to win you a week with five games of at least 70 receiving yards or a touchdown. Of course, while the offense is great, the passing volume isn't high enough to support multiple players. He's had at least four targets in all but one game this season and it's enough to roster him as your last WR.

FOLLOW US @AKAMAIFANTASY

WWW.AKAMAIFANTASYFOOTBALL.COM