

WEEK 4 DEF STREAMERS

LOOKING FOR TEAMS ON LESS THAN 60% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

MINNESOTA VIKINGS @ GB

I might be late to the party, but this MIN defense has been great, even if this pace is unsustainable. Forcing at least five sacks and multiple turnovers in every game this season and holding their opponents to single-digit scoring in two games, they have been the #1 defense by a margin. Even when the eventual regression arrives, I can't imagine this defense falling outside the top 12, barring any significant injuries and are matchup-proof.

NEW ORLEANS SAINTS @ ATL

While the offense was getting all the headlines, the defense has also been quietly impressive. Despite the loss last week, the defense still performed well, continuing to force at least three sacks and multiple turnovers in every game, especially against a good DAL offense. They're in the top 5 in the league and facing an ATL offense that's in the bottom ten in scoring, and with Cousins still not 100%, this is a good opportunity for the defense to continue their hot start.

DENVER BRONCOS @ NYJ

I understand the concern about Rodgers's strong performance last week, but I believe this defense is underrated because it is in unfavorable situations due to the struggling offense. Despite that, it has been decent, forcing multiple sacks and turnovers in two of its three games. They also held their opponents to under 14 points in back-to-back games and have been in the top ten in yards and points per game. While not a top option, they are a last-resort streaming option with potential for next week, too.

CHICAGO BEARS VS LAR

This isn't breaking news, but this defense is solid despite the inconsistent offensive performances. Over the past three games, they have held their opponents to 21 points or less and forced a sack and a turnover in every game. As the offense improves, I can imagine this helping the defense, too. They are facing a beat-up LAR offense with CAR and JAX at home the following two weeks. Because of the potential upside of a multi-week streaming option, they have become one of the better options available.
