

WEEK 5 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

KAREEM HUNT (RB) - KC (6)

While he's obviously one of the top waiver targets, let's stay focused here. He led the backfield in touches, but it was after Carson Steele fumbled on the game's first drive. Because of his solid performance, I believe Hunt will remain the lead back; however, if Steele or Samaje Perine has the hot hand, I can see them becoming the primary option for the game, and they will still be involved. Regardless, he should be rostered in all leagues and instantly become an RB3 if his role remains consistent.

2

DONTAYVION WICKS/ROMEO DOUBS (WR) - GB (10)

If Christian Watson were to miss multiple games, then I believe both players would benefit from more opportunities. Of course, we saw Wicks breakout last week with 13 targets and two touchdowns, but Doubs was also involved with eight targets. It didn't lead to much, but it's reassuring that the GB offense can support multiple receiving threats. If I had to choose, I suppose Wicks's upside is more enticing. However, don't sleep on Doubs, as either player becomes a flex option in PPR scoring leagues.

3

XAVIER LEGETTE (WR) - CAR (11)

Taking advantage of the injury to Adam Thelien, Legette had his best game last week, scoring his first touchdown on double-digit targets. He will have the next three weeks to build on his chemistry and solidify himself as the second receiving option behind Diontae Johnson. Even if Andy Dalton performs more like last week instead of the week before, Legette will have enough opportunities to become a serviceable flex option in PPR scoring leagues only.

4

ANDY DALTON (QB) - CAR (11)

This may blow up in my face, but Dalton has proven himself to be a legitimate streaming option on a weekly basis. I don't expect him to continue throwing multiple touchdowns, and he will likely throw less than 250 yards than more, but I can't deny that offense looks capable, especially against bad defenses. It may be possible that Dalton can be a top-15 option against most matchups, but for now, I would be rostering him in six-point passing touchdown leagues as a potential bye-week fill-in.

FOLLOW US @AKAMAIFANTASY

WWW.AKAMAIFANTASYFOOTBALL.COM