

UNDER/OVER RATED – WR

2021–2022 SEASON

ODELL BECKHAM JR UNDERRATED

I acknowledge he's been struggling with injuries and hasn't looked like the elite player on the Giants. As a result, he's fallen outside of the top 24 in most drafts, and while he's within that range in outcomes, I like taking a chance on his upside to crack the top 20 and provide solid numbers at his mid-round value. He's risky, but I wouldn't say I like to play it safe all the time.

OVERRATED

CEEDEE LAMB

My problem is that he's drafted within the top 12, and that's many expectations for a second-year player. He's a couple of spots ahead of Amari Cooper and is considered the 1A of the team. He can finish in the top 12; he could also finish outside of the top 15, and I wouldn't be surprised and would prefer to draft Cooper since their range of outcomes is similar.

COURTLAND SUTTON UNDERRATED

With Teddy Bridgewater the starting QB, the offense may lack explosiveness but will be more consistent last season. After missing last season to a torn ACL, he will be looking to remind everyone he was a 1,100-yard receiver with Drew Lock & Joe Flacco. Drafted outside of the top 30, he feels like a borderline WR2 option on a discount.

OVERRATED

BRANDON AIYUK

This is not a Deebo is better than Aiyuk take. This is a don't forget about Kittle and the run-heavy offense that Shanahan likes to run (2nd in rush attempts in 2019). With an ADP within the top 24, the upside is priced in, and there's too much downside for me to target him until he falls around a few spots.
