

WEEK 13 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

ZAY JONES (WR) - JAX

I understand this is probably one of the most frequent options, but it's for a good reason. The prevailing issue with Jones was Christian Kirk's role as the clear WR1 within the offense, which limited the upside despite the solid WR4 floor. Now, after a couple of games where Jones has surpassed 50 receiving yards in back-to-back games, he has a great matchup against DET and could be a PPR flex option during the fantasy playoffs.

2

NICO COLLINS (WR) - HOU

Over the past three weeks, he has at least five catches and 40 yards on seven targets. While that isn't more than a WR4/5 in most leagues, he's leading the team in targets over the past two games. If he can remain the top target for Kyle Allen, he can be the primary receiving threat on a team that will be forced to throw the ball because they suck. He's a speculative add that could end up with WR3 potential if that HOU offense could get back on track.

3

ZONOVAN KNIGHT (RB) - NYJ

With James Robinson a healthy scratch last week and Michael Carter hurt, this opens up an opportunity for Zonovan Knight to take on the lead role even if Robinson returns. Knight played well last week and has RB3 potential if he continues to get double-digit carries. However, this is nothing more than a speculative add with RB2 upside due to the ambiguity of injuries and how the snaps will be split up.

4

JORDAN MASON (RB) - SF

Another speculative add with Elijah Mitchell injured for a few weeks and Christian McCaffrey banged up also opens up an opportunity in one of the better rushing offenses. Jordan Mason looked solid in his limited touches last week and could be one of the higher-end handcuffs worth a bench spot and have potential standalone value. While he may not end up having a starting role this season, he can still have flex-worthy games against good matchups.

FOLLOW US @AKAMAIFANTASY

WWW.AKAMAIFANTASYFOOTBALL.COM