

WEEK 12 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

LATAVIUS MURRAY (RB) - DEN

Melvin Gordon's release and Chase Edmonds's injury opens the door for Murray to take over the lead role. While that won't lead to weekly RB2 numbers, his floor as a RB3/flex option is solidified, even if Edmonds returns at some point later this season. With at least 14 rushing attempts in three of the past five games, I expect the volume to remain consistent while still being involved as a receiver (11 targets in the past four games). If you didn't pick him up earlier, this is why he was a bench stash for me.

2

SAMAJE PERINE (RB) - CIN

This recommendation is betting on Joe Mixon missing the game, and if he doesn't, then Perine will be nothing more than a bench stash. However, finding a starting RB (even for a week) is pretty valuable at this point of the season. With Mixon hurt, Perine stepped in and was effective as a receiving threat out of the backfield while finishing with double-digit rushing attempts. He will not have the RB1 upside that Mixon has, but as a flex option, he's a solid RB3 if Mixon is out.

3

TREYLON BURKS (WR) - TEN

Since returning from IR, he has averaged seven targets in the run-heavy offense. While no TEN pass-catcher has become fantasy relevant this season, there could be an opportunity for this rookie WR to finish as a WR3 in PPR scoring formats. Currently, he's purely a speculative add since the TEN passing offense is highly volatile, but if he's able to be the WR1 within the offense, he could end up as a boom-or-bust flex option in PPR-scoring leagues.

4

DARIUS SLAYTON (WR) - NYG

The injury to Wan'Dale Robinson has allowed Darius Slayton to be the clear WR1 within the offense. He has surpassed 50 receiving yards in four straight games and finished with double-digit targets last week. Since Week 4, he has at least six targets in five games and scored a touchdown in two of the previous four. While this isn't a pass-heavy offense that gives Slayton a floor you would expect, he's now become similar to

FOLLOW US @AKAMAIFANTASY

WWW.AKAMAIFANTASYFOOTBALL.COM