

WEEK 7 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

RONDALE MOORE - WR (AZ)

With Robby Anderson getting all the attention, this is your chance to grab the likely WR2 within the offense, with Marquise Brown expected to miss at least a few games, if not more. Since returning from injury, he has averaged at least seven targets in the past three games. While he surpassed 50 receiving yards once, he's only valuable in PPR scoring leagues as a volatile flex option with WR2 upside (especially the first couple of weeks with Robby Anderson learning the offense).

DONOVAN PEOPLES-JONES - WR (CLE)

Ever since I mentioned him after his Week 1 performance, he was horrible for the next two weeks. Averaging seven targets over the past three games, he has surpassed 70 receiving yards twice. While Amari Cooper and David Njoku will get involved, People's-Jones seems to have separated himself from a boom-or-bust option to a weekly contributor. He's not a WR3 yet, but he's worth a speculative add as a bench stash.

DANIEL BELLINGER - TE (NYG)

Would you believe me if I told you that Daniel Bellinger is less than a handful of points away in PPR-scoring leagues from being a top-12 TE? He's averaging four targets over the past four games but has at least three catches in those games. He's also a redzone target (three touchdowns in five games), and the injuries to the WRs open up the opportunity for Bellinger to be a consistent contributor and just finish as a top-15 TE, great for a bye-week filler.

NICO COLLINS - WR (HOU)

He's averaged six targets over the last four games and has surpassed 50 receiving yards in three of the four. He has become the second or third receiving option every week. He may become the primary receiving threat against certain matchups depending on how defenses try to slow down Brandin Cooks. Currently, he's a speculative WR4 with some flex upside if he can continue playing well.
