

WEEK 11 DEF STREAMERS

LOOKING FOR TEAMS ON LESS THAN 60% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

NEW YORK JETS @ NE

Coming off the bye week, this top-five defense in: yards per play, rushing yards per attempt, passing yards per attempt, and in redzone attempts allowed will get to face a run-heavy NE offense. While their last matchup ended in a loss, they still pressured the quarterback, forcing a season-high six sacks (they have at least four in three of the past four games). They've also held their opponents to 20 points or less in five of the past six games.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS VS. CIN

With the return of T.J. Watt, the defense held the NO offense to 10 points (lowest scoring output of the season) and forced more than one sack and turnover (which hasn't been done since Week 1). It's clear that the return of Watt helped the pass rush, and facing a CIN offense that's bottom three in sacks allowed gives me the belief that this could be a sneaky top-15 play. There's certainly a risk, but with PIT being a top-ten defense in rush yards per attempt, I'm confident they'll boom more than bust.

WASHINGTON COMMANDERS @ HOU

Another risky option, this defense is above average against the run (average in yards per attempt, 2nd best in rushing touchdowns allowed) facing Dameon Pierce, who has surpassed 90 rushing yards in five of the past six games. However, they have held their opponents to 21 points or less in six straight games and have generated multiple sacks or turnovers in three consecutive games. While they aren't my first option, they are a solid candidate for a last resort spot start.

4

ARIZONA CARDINALS VS. SF

This AZ defense has been giving up a ton of points (30+ in three of the past four games), despite forcing multiple sacks and a turnover in three straight games. They also have five defensive touchdowns, giving some upside. Above average in rushing yards per attempt and forcing turnovers, there's a possibility that they will continue the streak against an SF offense that's top-ten in turnovers. Still, I wouldn't rush to grab them over the other options I mentioned.
