

WEEK 7 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 45% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

J.D. MCKISSIC - RB (WAS) - WK 9 BYE

If you followed me last season, he was my bye-week filler RB in PPR scoring formats. With Gibson hurt, we'll see more snaps for Mckissic in games with a pass-heavy game script. In games where he finished with five targets, he either scored a TD or finished with over 60 receiving yards. However, until we know the severity of Gibson's injury, I wouldn't be spending too much to pick him up if it's only for a week or two.

2

TIM PATRICK - WR (DEN) - WK 11 BYE

With Jeudy injured, he has been a decent WR3 over the past month finishing with either more than 80 yards or a TD in five games. Despite Sutton being the primary target, Patrick has been a steady presence within the offense as a redzone target and secondary option (3rd on the team in targets). Until Jeudy returns, I'm confident starting him as a bye-week filler or streaming flex option.

3

DARNELL MOONEY - WR (CHI) - WK 10 BYE

Scoring his first TD last week, he finished with a season-high eight targets and is starting to put together a couple of decent games despite the limited CHI offense with a rookie QB. Threatening the WR1 role within the offense, Mooney has become more of a 1B to Robinson's 1A. Due to volatility, he is still a boom-or-bust option, but he's still worth stashing or starting if you're desperate for a spot start.

4

A.J. GREEN - WR (AZ) - WK 12 BYE

I never thought I would see this name here after last season. I was one of his supporters last season who gave up on him when he went to AZ. He has become a solid boom-or-bust flex option, finishing with at least six targets in all but one game this season and scoring a TD in three out of the past five games. I wouldn't start him every week, but rather a bye-week filler in good matchups.
