

WEEK 2 DEF STREAMERS

LOOKING FOR TEAMS ON LESS THAN 55% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

CLEVELAND BROWNS VS NYJ

Facing an offense without their starting tackles and QB is the first green flag. They got to Baker last week (4 sacks) and should continue with another multi-sack performance. NYJ struggled on converting 3rd downs last week; we could see a discrepancy in the time of possession with CLE controlling the clock. The NYJ offense is capable of scoring, but it shouldn't be enough to deter me from one of the safer streaming options.

CINCINNATI BENGALS @ DAL

This is an obvious one with the injury to Dak Prescott. Cooper Rush has been nothing more than a game manager in recent history. This defense wasn't impressive last week against Trubisky, but I'm confident we'll see a better performance when Burrow doesn't have four picks. I'm not sure if this is the best option among the four, but it feels like the safest option for six to eight points.

MIAMI DOLPHINS @ BAL

This is a bit risky; however, without Edwards and possibly Dobbins, there's no rushing threat besides Jackson, which caps the effectiveness of the entire offense. Jackson ran six times for 17 yards in a comfortable win. Kenyan Drake and Mike Davis aren't the answers, and I can see MIA's secondary capable of preventing the big plays that BAL had last week. They created three turnovers against NE, and I wouldn't be surprised if they were able to force a couple this week.

4

PITTSBURGH STEELERS VS NE

The injury to Mac Jones doesn't seem severe enough to keep him out. However, he didn't have a good performance last week, and I feel confident that he will struggle to bounce back against a defense that forced five turnovers and beat a team that made the Super Bowl last season. Watt's injury hurts, but he didn't get all seven sacks last week.
