

WEEK 2 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 45% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

JEFF WILSON JR. - RB (SF)

With Mitchell expected to be out a few weeks, this is a no-brainer. He was the clear handcuff and is now in line for double-digit carries within a run-heavy offense. Trey Lance and Deebo Samuel certainly hurt the upside of Wilson so that I wouldn't burn my #1 waiver immediately for him, but he is a clear RB pick-up this week.

DONOVAN PEOPLES-JONES- WR (CLE)

There's not much to say, but nearly a 30% target share and being involved in 83% snaps last week is worth investing further. Sure, Amari Cooper will get more involved, but I wonder if we found the clear WR2 (potentially 1B) within the offense. Jacoby Brissett showed chemistry with Peoples-Jones; for the next ten games, he may be a top 30 WR.

3

CURTIS SAMUEL - WR (WAS)

He struggled to stay healthy last year but was a key offensive piece last week (71% of offensive snaps), being used as a rushing and receiving weapon finishing with four carries and double-digit targets. Carson Wentz seems to have chemistry with him and could be a weekly flex option in PPR formats. There were designated plays to get Samuel involved, and he looked effective in a role similar to Deebo Samuel.

4

DJ CHARK - WR (DET)

With eight targets last week and involved in 81% of offensive snaps, he was a primary receiving threat within the offense. While he is undoubtedly the least exciting candidate out of the four, he is worth mentioning because he could be the weekly 2nd/3rd option with T.J. Hockenson. While that may not be top 30 WR numbers, he is still worthy of a bench spot and a boom or bust flex option.
