

WEEK 10 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

DEMARIO DOUGLAS (WR) - NE (11)

Due to the injuries to Kendrick Bourne and Devante Parker, he has taken advantage of the opportunities by averaging at least six targets over the past three games and surpassing 50 receiving yards in two of those. The lack of upside is concerning, and when Parker returns, we may see fewer targets, but putting up flex numbers in PPR is decent if you have an open bench spot or need a bye-week fill-in. I wouldn't spend much FAAB on him, but he's worth a flier as a WR5 to monitor at the end of your bench.

2

KEATON MITCHELL (RB) - BAL (13)

I'm not too crazy about him despite his performance last week. He's in a committee with two other RBs and a rushing QB which limits his floor and requires him to make a big play in order to be fantasy-relevant. However, he's looked good so far, and his role may grow over time. If you need an RB, he's a potential guy to roster and see if the snaps/touches increase weekly. If he ever becomes someone with consistent double-digit touches, he may be worth starting as a flex option. Until then, he's a bench player with upside.

3

JONNU SMITH (TE) - ATL (11)

With the TE position being a wasteland, it's surprising that he's still a top-12 TE in half-PPR leagues. He had a season-high in receiving yards last week and scored his second TD in the past four games. With Heinicke as the starter this week, I have confidence that Smith will remain one of the top three receiving threats on offense even if Drake London returns from injury. I wouldn't say he's worth starting weekly, but if you're rostering two TEs or if you have an upcoming bye, he's a decent option to pick up.

4

TREY MCBRIDE/MICHAEL WILSON (TE/WR) - AZ (14)

I was considering Tank Dell, but I'm pretty sure you already know he's worth rostering. Instead, I will recommend taking a shot on one of these receiving options with Kyler Murray and James Conner coming back. It may not be an immediate effect, but one of these guys, if not both, will be worthy of a spot-start. I don't think either guy will be the clear-cut second option on the team, and it will depend on the matchup. However, it won't hurt to take a shot at one of these players, depending on your team's needs.

FOLLOW US @AKAMAIFANTASY

WWW.AKAMAIFANTASYFOOTBALL.COM