

WEEK 4 DEF STREAMERS

LOOKING FOR TEAMS ON LESS THAN 60% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

KANSAS CITY CHIEFS @ TB

Despite the return of Mike Evans for TB, this is still a decent matchup. KC's defense is in the top ten in total sacks, yards per play allowed, rushing yards per attempt, and net yards per pass attempt. With games against LAC and AZ, they have proven themselves against good quarterbacks. If a combination of Julio Jones/Russell Gage/Chris Godwin misses this week, they are in top-12 consideration.

HOUSTON TEXANS VS LAC

How surprised are you that the HOU defense is currently within the top 15? They are impressive, currently in the top-five in sacks and top-12 in forcing turnovers. Now tied for leading the league in the fewest passing TDs allowed (2). Facing against an injured Justin Herbert, who's also missing their starting LT and C, this is a swing for the fences option where it's a wide range of possible outcomes.

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES VS JAX

This shouldn't be a big surprise after their dominant performance last week. They are in the top ten in yards per play allowed, top five in net yards per pass attempt, and lowest percentage of opponent's drives ending with a score. They are bottom five in yards allowed per rush attempt, so it's not a perfect matchup. But if they can continue sacking the QB and not give up big plays, this is a pretty solid streaming option.

CINCINNATI BENGALS VS MIA

Even if Tua plays, this is a decent matchup as the CIN defense is top 12 in yards per play allowed, turnovers, net yards per pass attempt, and rush yards per attempt. With the short turn-around time, I'm not expecting starting RT Greg Little to return, but that won't determine whether I stream this defense. If one or both of these guys miss the game, this could be a top-12 defense.
