

WEEK 6 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

MARQUEZ VALDES-SCANTLING - WR (KC)

I mentioned him earlier, and he's been stringing along some solid performances recently. He finished with a season-high 90 yards while tied for leading the team in targets. Averaging nearly seven targets a game, over 50 receiving yards, and utilized as a big-play threat, he's a solid flex option to start as a bye-week filler. He hadn't scored a touchdown yet, but is a WR4 due to consistent targets.

ENO BENJAMIN - RB (AZ)

With James Conner and Darrell Williams unlikely to play this week, Eno Benjamin appears to be the lead RB and finished last week with an unimpressive 3.1 yards per carry and got 44% of his rushing yards from one play. While he's likely a short-term low-end flex option in PPR leagues, he may be worth a bench staff if Williams or Conner were to miss more than a game.

JAKOBI MEYERS - WR (NE)

After missing the last two weeks due to injury, he returned with a dominating performance accounting for 59% of the team's receiving yards with a 38% target share. In the past three games, he's averaged 87 yards on nine targets a game. If he remains the team's top target, he can provide WR3 value in PPR league with WR2 upside.

ALEC PIERCE - WR (IND)

A sleeper considering he's on a struggling offense. However, he's been more involved recently, averaging 80 receiving yards over the past two games on seven targets. While I don't expect him to continue at this pace, he's an interesting bench stash. This will probably apply to larger leagues (12-14).
