

UNDER/OVER RATED – RB

2021–2022 SEASON

MILES SANDERS UNDERRATED

Playing 12 games last season, he still finished within the top 24 and is returning to an offensive line that was missing Pro-Bowler Brandon Brooks last year. However, the team drafted RB Kenneth Gainwell to help split touches. He's still in a committee that limits his ceiling, but I anticipate he will make the most out of every carry and outperform his ADP (RB19-20).

OVERRATED KAREEM HUNT

In the four games he started last season due to Chubb's injury, he averaged less than 70 yards on more than 16 carries a game and didn't see more than four targets. He's currently drafted within the top 24, and while there's an upside, there's also a chance he underperforms if Chubb plays all 17 games, which makes me hesitant to target him until the next round.

RAHEEM MOSTERT UNDERRATED

With Trey Sermon looking to be a part of the committee, the consensus is that Mostert is no longer a top 24 option. I almost agree, but don't forget that Jeff Wilson is on the PUP list, and Mostert is projected to be the lead guy at the start of the season. He's also dealt with injuries, so there's certainly a risk, but I believe he will outperform his ADP if healthy.

OVERRATED MICHAEL CARTER

Drafted outside of the top 30 RB, he's not that overrated, but there are just too many questions for me to select him at his ADP. He's a rookie in a crowded backfield on a rebuilding team. He may be a flex option by the second half of the season, but I'm waiting a couple of rounds later before I draft him.
