

WEEK 9 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

GARRETT WILSON (WR - NYJ)

Barely making the cut, he's fallen out of favor due to the limited passing volume within the offense. However, the injury to Breece Hall and injuries along the offensive line may force the team to move in a different direction. Coming off a 100-yard performance and leading the team in targets, he's a WR3 candidate with upside if they continue to throw the ball more and with Corey Davis hurt gives me more optimism that Wilson can be a weekly start.

2

RONDALE MOORE (WR - AZ)

After a rough performance the week before, he bounced back, finishing second on the team in targets last week. With the injury to Marquise Brown, Moore has surpassed eight targets in three of the five games he played. In PPR scoring formats, he has WR3/flex potential every week. Add onto the fact that the AZ offense struggled to run the ball, which gives me more confidence.

3

ROMEO DOUBS (WR - GB)

While it's not an envious passing situation to be involved in, he's leading the team in targets, and with Allen Lazard unable to separate himself as the clear WR1, Doubs has been inconsistent at best. He's undoubtedly a speculative add as a WR4/5, particularly as a bye-week filler could be helpful in the next couple of weeks if he's able to show some consistency, even if it's the second receiving option.

4

LATAVIUS MURRAY (RB - DEN)

When the Broncos first signed him, he competed for touches in a three-person committee. However, with the injury to Mike Boone and Melvin Gordon not looking great, this has opened up a weekly role within the offense for Murray. What makes him interesting is that he appears to be the goal-line option. Scoring touchdowns in consecutive games and averaging double-digit carries, he's a solid TD-dependant flex option.

FOLLOW US @AKAMAIFANTASY

WWW.AKAMAIFANTASYFOOTBALL.COM