

WEEK 2 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

ISAIAH LIKELY (TE) - BAL

An obvious mention, he looked like the #1 receiving option on the team, leading both teams in targets, catches, and yards. He was one out of three Ravens targets to finish with more than two catches in the game. Of course, we don't expect this type of target share to continue, but the upside is too high to not take a shot on the #1 TE this week as a potential streaming candidate.

TANK BIGSBY (RB) - JAX

Finishing in an even split in touches with Travis Etienne was surprising, even though he had the hot hand with a couple of big runs early. He wasn't targeted once in the game, but he looked solid as a second option behind Etienne, and I imagine he will continue to be involved in the offense. He's a solid handcuff with potential standalone value if you need depth at RB.

3

COLBY PARKINSON/DEMARCUS ROBINSON/TYLER JOHNSON - LAR (6)

With the multi-week injury to Puka, there's an opening for a secondary receiving option behind Cooper Kupp. All of these names were involved, and none of the three stood out from each other. This makes it hard to predict which of the three will be a legitimate option, and I'm also anticipating it to be on a game-by-game basis. Therefore, I'm stashing any of the three and hoping that I picked the right one.

WANDALE ROBINSON (WR) - NYG (11)

I know that Allen Lazard is an obvious target, but I actually think there's more long-term potential in Robinson instead. While his 12 targets led to six catches for under 50 yards, no other player besides Nabers finished with more than five targets. He may end up as a PPR-only option as a low upside flex, but if he continues to be a top 3 receiving option on the team, he will provide value even if it's not exciting.
