

WAIVER ADDS WEEK 11

11/17/2020

These five players should be targeted in most 12 team leagues and are currently rostered in less than 40% of Yahoo leagues.

JALEN REAGOR - PHI (9)

It wasn't as impressive as I hoped, but leading the team in targets is a positive takeaway. Carson Wentz's play was disappointing, but I think it will get better with time. Even when Ertz returns, I'm confident that his role will not change with defenses concerned about Fulgham and Sanders. Facing CLE is not a scary matchup, and I'm okay with starting him as a flex option hoping for that touchdown.

TIM PATRICK - DEN (5)

He has averaged more than six targets in four out of the last five games played. With his big frame, he's able to make those contested catches. Sure, there's limited upside since Jeudy, Hamler, and Fant will compete for targets, but the big play targets he receives are similar to what Mike Williams's role is on the Chargers.

TONY POLLARD/ALEXANDER MATTISON/ETC.

PSA: this is when you should pick up your handcuff or a handcuff if you have an available roster spot and you can afford a loss or two. As we approach the playoffs, it's essential to have a back-up plan when relying on your workhorse RBs. Plus, if you struggle with RB depth, what better upside than an immediate starting option if the starter goes down.

SALVON AHMED - MIA (7)

I'm slightly kicking myself for not recognizing him last week. With Howard a healthy scratch and Breida inactive, he finished with 22 touches for 90 yards and a TD, which is RB1 territory. As a Gaskin manager, I wonder if this will be a two or three back committee similar to the Rams. But if you need to win this week, he's the first option.

MICHAEL PITTMAN JR. - IND (7)

Sometimes you get lucky. If you happened to read last week's waivers, you might have seen his name on here because I saw potential chemistry between him and Rivers last week. Unfortunately, I don't expect this type of production next week against GB nor expect nine targets once defenses focus on stopping him. He's still a WR3 that I will target, but temper expectations.
