

WEEK 4 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

JOSHUA PALMER/QUENTIN JOHNSTON (WR) - LAC (5)

With Mike Williams out of the season, this opens up an opportunity for someone to take on an increased role, which will likely lead to some big games considering the LAC offense (top ten in yards per game and points per game). Now Palmer has the early lead and will get an opportunity to start, which may make him the top option. However, if you don't need a WR immediately, take a shot on rookie Quentin Johnson, who may be the guy by the second half of the season.

2

TANK DELL (WR) - HOU (7)

After recommending him last week, he has had his best performance of the season with double-digit targets, 146 receiving yards, and his second TD of the season. This is the upside that I was referring to, and while he may not have this target share every week, he's one of the top receiving threats within this offense and should continue to grow and solidify his role within the offense. I wouldn't consider him the top option, but he is worth stashing as a WR4/5.

3

ADAM THIELEN (WR) - CAR (7)

This feels wild since I wrote him off before the season started, but Adam Thielen is showing that he's still worth rostering in fantasy football with two strong performances in back-to-back weeks. With Bryce Young injured, Thielen showed some chemistry with Andy Dalton and became the clear top receiving threat. I don't expect this to continue throughout the year, but if you're in a pinch and need to start someone this week, it's not a bad desperation flex option.

4

LUKE MUSGRAVE (TE) - GB (6)

With the TE position being a wasteland, it has gotten to a point where the rookie TEs are possibly becoming weekly starters. It's still early, but Musgrave is a top-ten fantasy TE (PPR scoring). Sure, when Christian Watson returns, his volume may drop, but averaging five targets and surpassing 45 yards in two of three games is an intriguing trend to follow. If he continues this, he will likely finish as a top-12 TE and be one of the steals on the waiver wire.

FOLLOW US @AKAMAIFANTASY

WWW.AKAMAIFANTASYFOOTBALL.COM