

WEEK 9 DEF STREAMERS

LOOKING FOR TEAMS ON LESS THAN 60% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

ATLANTA FALCONS VS MIN

1

I'm not crazy about this option since they are not a good defense and haven't been impressive except for a couple of games against divisional rivals. However, they have generated multiple sacks in three consecutive games and forced a turnover in two of those games, and they face a MIN offense without their superstar WR and starting QB. MIN is also within the bottom five in turnovers, which is likely to continue with their offense missing their two most essential pieces. I would consider them a streaming option within the top 15.

LOS ANGELES CHARGERS @ NYJ

After a decent performance last week, they get another favorable matchup against an offense that hasn't scored more than 20 points only twice this season. Despite the decent matchup, this defense has looked better in recent weeks, forcing multiple turnovers in four of their last five games and generating a sack in every game. I wouldn't consider them a top-five option, but they have a solid floor as a top-10 to 12 option with some upside for double-digit points if they can continue to force multiple turnovers.

HOUSTON TEXANS VS TB

This one doesn't feel exciting, but it's hard to deny they have been solid recently. Over the past five games, they held their opponents to under 20 points in four of those games while forcing multiple turnovers in three of them. Of course, they haven't faced an elite offense in that span, but they do get to face a TB offense in the bottom ten of scoring and bottom five in rushing yards per game. Unfortunately, this defense lacks the upside to finish in the top five, but somewhere in the top 12-15 range is reasonable.

NEW YORK GIANTS @ LV

4

I have two teams listed, but which one depends on who starts for the NYG offense. If Jones/Taylor ends up playing, I'd like the NYG defense because they have forced multiple turnovers in four straight games, and the LV offense is in the bottom five in turnovers. However, the LV defense can destroy the NYG offense if Tommy Devito is the starter again since they generated multiple sacks and a turnover in three of their last five games. They also held their opponents in four games during that span, so it's a toss-up between these two teams.
