

WEEK 8 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

JOSH DOWNS (WR) - IND (11)

Here's a friendly reminder that he's surpassed six targets in three of the last four games while averaging 50 receiving yards in that span. I understand he's not within the top 36 WRs, but when you have bye weeks and RBs are getting hurt left and right, he's a decent last-resort flex option to plug in a pinch. He has shown to be a weekly contributor, regardless of who's at QB. He does have some tough upcoming matchups in CLE and NO, so I don't blame you for hesitating, but I still think he's worth rostering.

2

KENDRICK BOURNE (WR) - NE (11)

He's been inconsistent at best, but you cannot deny his upside on this offense. Sure, it's a boom-or-bust option on a putrid offense, but he's available in nearly every league and could provide that week-winning performance. If you're battling multiple injuries and are looking for a "warm body" to get you through the week, then I would consider him a last resort option. He's the primary receiving threat within this offense, with 16 more targets and over 100 yards more than anyone on the team.

3

JAMAAL WILLIAMS (RB) - NO (11)

He might not be available in your league, but for those with limited IR spots, he is a sneaky pick-up as a potential flex option when he returns. With Kamara back, he won't have the volume to finish within the top 30, but that doesn't mean he won't have productive weeks as a complimentary option. Due to Kamara's suspension, we haven't had a game where they both were healthy, so he may steal some touches on the eardowns. At worse, he's a high-end handcuff.

4

TYJAE SPEARS (RB) - TEN (7)

While he's been getting some attention, I still think he should be on more teams in more leagues (especially PPR). He's still a high-end handcuff on a relatively poor TEN offense, but he's getting close to having standalone value as an RB3/flex option. He's been efficient with his limited rush attempts but has compensated with at least three catches in three of the last four games. While he's on bye this week, maybe you can find him on waivers, or you can trade for him if you're missing a couple of RBs to injuries.

FOLLOW US @AKAMAIFANTASY

WWW.AKAMAIFANTASYFOOTBALL.COM