

WEEK 3 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 60% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

GARRETT WILSON - WR (NYJ)

One of the most popular recommendations, and it's no surprise why after a breakout performance. Of course, I don't anticipate him being the clear WR1 on that team, but you cannot be excited at the potential upside with 22 targets in two games. The passing volume of Joe Flacco has helped, and this may be the ceiling for his rookie year, but definitely a swing for the fences type of pickup.

2

JAKOBI MEYERS- WR (NE)

Currently a top-24 WR in PPR leagues, he has been the definitive #1 receiving option on that team with 19 targets in two games. While he won't keep up that pace and will regress, it seems silly to think that he won't remain a fantasy-relevant option during the bye weeks as a WR3/flex option. Mac Jones has chemistry with Meyers, something he hasn't developed with Devante Parker, and maybe it won't.

3

GERALD EVERETT - TE (LAC)

With all the chaos in the TE position, Gerald Everett has found himself within the top ten TEs averaging seven targets on a Justin Herbert offense. He appears to be the 3rd option within the offense and has played well despite a couple of mistakes. With the injury to Keenan Allen, he stepped up, finishing with ten targets and over 70 receiving yards. If you have someone disappointing, I would consider adding him.

4

ENO BENJAMIN - RB (AZ)

With the injury to James Conner, Eno Benjamin and Darrell Williams were in a committee, with Williams scoring a touchdown. Despite Williams appearing to have the goal-line touches, I believe Benjamin will be more consistent weekly, especially in PPR-scoring leagues. If Conner misses time, Benjamin becomes a high floor, low upside RB3/flex option that can get you eight to ten points.

FOLLOW US @AKAMAIFANTASY

WWW.AKAMAIFANTASYFOOTBALL.COM