

WEEK 9 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 45% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

ADRIAN PETERSON - RB (TEN) - WK 13 BYE

With the injury to Derrick Henry, the Titans were quick to sign Peterson to their roster, anticipating that he will be the early downs option and possibly goal-line too. He will be splitting carries with Jeremy McNichols, but I expect RB3 value with RB2 upside if Peterson ends with 15-18 carries per game. I wouldn't be spending much more on him over McNichols as I believe they both will have roles in the offense.

2

BOSTON SCOTT - RB (PHI) - WK 14 BYE

With Miles Sanders on IR, the addition of Jordan Howard along with Gainwell initially scared me away from him. However, finishing with three TDs in two games despite all that proves to me that there's some spot start value within this committee. Assuming that they won't be blowing out teams like last week, I don't believe that he will be worthy of anything more than a flex option with upside but upside nonetheless.

3

JEREMY MCNICHOLS - RB (TEN) - WK 13 BYE

If you're in a PPR scoring league, I would consider targeting him as he will expand his role within the offense. He has never gotten more than two carries in a game, and I don't see that increasing to double digits either. However, if he gets around a handful of carries as well as four to five targets, he could end up being a double-digit flex option against good matchups where TEN will be passing more.

4

DEVANTE PARKER - WR (MIA) - WK 14 BYE

After missing the last three games to injury, Parker immediately returned to his role, finishing with a season-high in targets and receptions. While he's not the primary receiving option, he finished with at least four catches in every game played and had more than 75 yards in three out of the five games. As long as Tua is the QB, I'm confident we will continue to see WR3 production.
