

2021 BOLD PREDICTIONS

ODELL BECKHAM WILL FINISH AS WR24 OR BETTER

There are some players every season that I find myself unusually high on despite being so confident in my stance. The injury concerns are real; the run-heavy offense is real. But, the talent is also real, and I'm betting on talent that he will be able to reach another 1,000-yard season however will score at least eight TDs (2016) and become a redzone threat similar to Adam Thielen.

MARK ANDREWS WILL FINISH AS THE TE4

It wouldn't be right for me not to mention how I'm a Mark Andrews fan after his rookie season in 2018. In 2020, we learned that Andrews is dependant on Lamar Jackson and making big plays. Coming into 2021, he's being drafted along with the likes of T.J Hockenson and after Kyle Pitts, who are also primary receiving options and learning a new offensive scheme for a first-time head coach in the NFL.

TOM BRADY IS THE LATE ROUND QB TO DRAFT

Normally, late-round QBs mean a guy in the double-digit rounds. However, I'm noticing that Brady is taken within the mid-rounds (7-8th round) despite nearly finishing within the top 6 last year. He doesn't have the rushing upside of Russ/Lamar, but he's still good for a couple of goal-line TDs. Additionally, the return of Godwin and Brown gives me confidence in another 4,500 yards and 36 TD season.

4

RAHEEM MOSTERT WILL FINISH AS A TOP 24 RB

Saving the best for last, you must think I hate Trey Sermon. When healthy, Mostert is a player who doesn't need 18 touches to make an impact (2019 - Weeks 11--17 & 8 TDs in 82 carries). His explosiveness will compensate for the lack of volume, especially without Jeff Wilson (PUP) early in the year. I wouldn't be surprised if he has a top 12 performance within the first month of the season.
