

WEEK 2 DEF STREAMERS

LOOKING FOR TEAMS ON LESS THAN 60% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

LOS ANGELES CHARGERS @ CAR

Against a below-average LV offense, they are facing another struggling offense that looked even worse. Last week, they generated four sacks and forced multiple turnovers and will have a good chance of repeating that against a CAR offense that had a turnover on their first play of the game. They also had less than 200 yards of offense, which is in the bottom two of the league. There's not much concern as I believe this is one of the best streaming options available, and I'm targeting them in most leagues.

DENVER BRONCOS VS PIT

Despite the poor offense, this defense held its own against a solid SEA offense. They forced two safeties, two turnovers, and sacks while holding them to single-digit scoring in the first half. They now get to face a struggling PIT offense that had to settle for six FGs to win the game. I don't expect this to be a high-scoring game, and with Fields expected to start, this defense should finish in the top 12 if they don't let Fields break off any big runs like last week—certainly not a sexy pick, but a solid one with a decent floor.

INDIANAPOLIS COLTS @ GB

With Jordan Love injured, this opens up an opportunity for a defense that didn't look great against a good HOU offense. Against HOU, they were able to generate four sacks, and I anticipate they'll be able to do the same against the backup QB Malik Willis. There is some concern as HOU was able to run the ball well and its likely GB will do the same to prevent turnovers and costly mistakes. However, this is a high floor streaming option since I can't see IND not being a top-15 option.

SEATTLE SEAHAWKS @ NE

This one doesn't feel great, considering this defense underperformed against a poor DEN offense with a rookie quarterback. On the positive, they did force multiple sacks and turnovers while holding the offense to under 20 points. However, NE ran the ball well last week, and I'm not sure if SEA will have enough upside to be a top streaming option, even with the solid floor. Despite that, I can't deny the favorable matchup and would target them if I miss the above options.
