

WEEK 5 WAIVERS

LOOKING FOR PLAYERS ON LESS THAN 50% OF ROSTERS IN YAHOO

1

TYLER ALLGEIER - RB (ATL)

With the injury to Cordarelle Patterson, Tyler Allgeier steps up as the lead back in a committee with Caleb Huntley. Both guys finished with ten carries. However, Allgeier being involved earlier in the year gives me the impression that the coaching staff trusts him more. While he is a starting RB, I wouldn't break the bank for him, considering he's on a mediocre offense and is nothing more than a flex play.

GEORGE PICKENS - WR (PIT)

It wasn't even a full game, but it was clear that Kenny Pickett has chemistry with the rookie WR. Finishing with a season-high in targets, he is a WR stash that could end up being the WR2 within the offense ahead of Chase Claypool. While it's way too early to tell what we can expect from Pickens, he is a WR5 with upside that may end up being a flex play once Pickett gets settled in the offense and we have a clearer picture.

LATAVIUS MURRAY - RB (DEN)

With the injury to Javonte Williams, and Melvin Gordon not looking impressive, this opens up a big hole for Murray to fill as part of a committee with Mike Boone. The upside is that Murray may end up as the early downs/goal-line option, depending on how things play out in the season. Looking solid last week, I'm anticipating a low-end RB3 with flex potential if he received the majority of carries within the offense.

4

JOSH REYNOLDS - WR (DET)

Obviously, he saw more volume as their top-two receivers were injured. However, he has played well and is around a top-24 WR in PPR leagues. Coming off back-to-back games with at least eight targets and 80 yards, he is a speculative add that may end up being a volatile flex option on an offense that needs to score to stay competitive. He's an explosive flex option with WR3 potential if he takes over the WR2 role.
