2023 BOLD PREDICTIONS

1

TUA TAGOVAILOA FINISHES IN THE TOP FIVE AT THE END OF THE SEASON.

During the 13 games he played, he had nine games throwing over 250 yards, averaging over two touchdowns. Coming into the second season of this new offense with Tyreek Hill and Jaylen Waddle, Tua has an opportunity to surpass 4,000 passing yards and 30 touchdowns. Last season, only four players reached that benchmark.

2

JAMES CONNER FINISHES AHEAD OF TRAVIS ETIENNE.

While the AZ offense could be more exciting, Conner is a versatile feature RB who will receive the bulk of carries. His volume and receiving ability make him a top-20 RB, and the lack of competition will propel him over Travis Etienne, who will likely lose touches to rookie RB Tank Bigsby. Adding WR Calvin Ridley may also shift the JAX offense into a pass-heavy offense.

3

MICHAEL THOMAS FINISHES IN THE TOP 30 WRS THIS SEASON.

After missing all that time due to injuries, he flashed some of his ability last year. During that three-game span, he averaged five catches, over 55 yards and a touchdown per game. While the small sample size could be more helpful in projecting specific numbers, it's clear that he can be a weekly contributor behind Chris Olave with new QB Derek Carr as an upgrade to Andy Dalton.

4

TYLER HIGBEE WILL FINISH IN THE TOP TEN THIS SEASON.

He's been a consistent 2nd or 3rd option within the LAR offense over the past four seasons, surpassing 60 catches and 550 yards in three seasons. After the top six or seven, the last couple of spots are entirely unpredictable, and he could easily finish in the top ten in PPR scoring leagues as a volume-dependent, high-floor weekly option.
